Information and a person to talk with

National Institute on Aging (United States) — Public education on cognitive health and on memory changes. A starting point for learning; it does not replace an individual assessment.

Alzheimer’s Association (United States) — Its free, 24/7 helpline offers dementia-related information, support, and connections to resources for people living with dementia, families, caregivers, and the public. Call 800-272-3900. The helpline belongs to the Association, not to The Maxine Project.

In an emergency, call 911. Do not use this directory or a website contact route to delay urgent care.

Find community services

Eldercare Locator (United States) — A public service of the Administration for Community Living connecting older adults and families with community services. Search by location or call 800-677-1116.

When you contact a service, ask whom it serves, what it offers, whether there is a fee, what eligibility rules apply, and how it handles personal information. Availability and requirements differ by service.

The Maxine Project does not book appointments, make eligibility decisions, provide a staffed helpline, or guarantee access to an outside service.
